

I am SO excited to be teaching and learning alongside the staff and students at Seven Oaks Met School. As an educator, I believe in cultivating confidence and enthusiasm for learning through helping students find and explore what they are passionate about. My hope is that after our four years together, my students will be able to see how they can use their interests and passions to address some of the many challenges we face as a society, and believe in their ability to enact change and positively impact the communities that they are part of, however that looks for them. Relationships are the foundation to building community, which is why I value forming unique relationships with and amongst my students to ensure that our space is a safe and welcoming place for all young people.

While my teachable subjects are English and History, there are so many things that I am passionate and curious about. I spend plenty of my time outside- hiking and camping with my friends or playing with my dog Marley. I love reading and talking about books and crafts such as knitting, cross-stitching and crochet. Lately, I've been learning more deeply about the climate crisis, reconnecting with my past passion for graphic design and joining new sports teams. One of my favourite things about Met is all the new ideas and endless possibilities for learning that I am exposed to through the young people I am surrounded by- I can't wait to connect with you and support you on your learning journey!
